Sarah loves her practice because of the longstanding partnerships she develops with clients. Her objectives in every client interaction are to listen, understand their business and legal goals and achieve them through real-world preventative counseling, internal investigations, labor-management relations and employment litigation advocacy. The diversity of Sarah's practice yields unique perspective. In a single discussion, Sarah helps clients tackle issues facing unionized workforces, leave and disability law issues, discrimination, internal investigations, marijuana in the work workplace and more.

As co-leader of the firm's Healthcare industry group, Sarah is a trusted resource to healthcare clients navigating multifaceted issues specific to the industry. Healthcare employers rely on Sarah's guidance in managing significant physician employment issues. She prepares physician and other provider employment agreements, along with enforcing the same through litigation. She has a strong focus on graduate medical education employment-related issues, including remediation, dismissal and grievance processes.

She is a practical and zealous litigator in all aspects of employment law. Whether it be through proactive early resolution or managing litigation to trial, her focus remains on achieving the client's business objectives to ensure a successful result.

Sarah is also a member of the firm's Drug Testing and Substance Abuse Management team where she partners with clients to draft nationwide drug testing policies, provides reasonable suspicion training and advises on evolving complexities surrounding multi-state marijuana laws.

She has broad experience in representing employers in labor matters, including negotiations, strikes, unfair labor practice charges and grievance arbitrations. Sarah represents public employers before the State Board of Labor Relations and the State Board of Mediation, as well as private sector employers before the National Labor Relations Board.
