

Labor Board Returns to Case-by-Case Approach for Determining Lawfulness of Work Rules

By Jonathan J. Spitz, Richard F. Vitarelli, Richard I. Greenberg, Daniel J. Jacobs, Christopher M. Repole & Lorien E. Schoenstedt

August 7, 2023

Meet the Authors

Jonathan J. Spitz

(He/Him • Jon)

Principal

(404) 586-1835

Jonathan.Spitz@jacksonlewis.com

Richard F. Vitarelli

Principal

860-331-1553

Richard.Vitarelli@jacksonlewis.com

The National Labor Relations Board has again revised its standard for assessing whether an employer's facially neutral work rules (rules that do not explicitly restrict Section 7 activities) unlawfully restrict employee activity protected under the National Labor Relations Act. Stericycle, Inc., 372 NLRB No. 113 (2023).

The decision abandons the category-based approach to assess the lawfulness of work rules that balanced employers' business interests for maintaining them. Boeing Co., 365 NLRB No. 154 (2017). Stericycle reinstates a modified version of the Board's pro-employee, pre-Boeing case-by-case approach.

The decision applies retroactively to all pending cases.

Background

Lutheran Heritage Village-Livonia

The Board adopted the Lutheran Heritage standard in 2004, in an effort to prohibit overbroad work rules that chill employees' exercise of their Section 7 rights. Lutheran Heritage Village-Livonia, 343 NLRB No. 646. Under Lutheran Heritage, facially neutral work rules violate the Act upon a showing of one of the following:

1. Employees would "reasonably construe" the language to prohibit Section 7 activity;
2. The rule was promulgated in response to union activity; or
3. The rule was applied to restrict the exercise of Section 7 rights.

However, the Board did not outline how, if at all, employers' business interests factored into the assessment. As a result, even the maintenance of a neutral work rule could violate the Act if employees could "reasonably construe" the rule to prohibit organizing activity. Lutheran Heritage rejected a categorical approach to analyzing the lawfulness of work rules, instead implementing a case-by-case approach.

Boeing Co.

Adopting a new standard in Boeing Co., the Board sought to address the inconsistent evaluation of work rules that resulted under the Lutheran Heritage standard. The Board also sought to balance the impact of facially neutral work rules on workers' protected rights against employers' legitimate interests in maintaining them. The Board determined that, when analyzing the legality of a rule that, when reasonably interpreted, would potentially interfere with the exercise of Section 7 rights, the Board will evaluate: (i) the nature and extent of the potential impact on those rights; and (ii) the legitimate justifications associated with the rule.

Richard I. Greenberg

(Rich)

Principal

(212) 545-4080

Richard.Greenberg@jacksonlewis.com

Daniel J. Jacobs

(He/Him)

Principal

(212) 545-4049

Daniel.Jacobs@jacksonlewis.com

Christopher M. Repole

(He/Him)

Principal

(212) 545-4019

Christopher.Repole@jacksonlewis.com

Lorien E. Schoenstedt

KM Attorney

312-803-2516

Lorien.Schoenstedt@jacksonlewis.com

The Board classified company rules into three categories:

- Category 1 rules are lawful to maintain, “because (i) the rule, when reasonably interpreted, does not prohibit or interfere with the exercise of NLRA rights; or (ii) the potential adverse impact on protected rights is outweighed by justifications associated with the rule.”
- Category 2 “include[s] rules that warrant individualized scrutiny in each case as to whether the rule would prohibit or interfere with NLRA rights.”
- Category 3 rules are unlawful, “because they would prohibit or limit NLRA-protected conduct, and the adverse impact on NLRA rights is not outweighed by justifications associated with the rule.”

The categories were established to provide employers “certainty and predictability” regarding the legality of their rules.

Stericycle

In January 2022, the Board issued a public notice inviting parties and amici to submit briefs addressing whether a new standard should be adopted. The Board’s decision in Stericycle adopts a modified Lutheran Heritage standard and abandons the categories set forth in Boeing.

The Board will assess “the specific wording of the rule, the specific industry and workplace context in which it is maintained, the specific employer interests it may advance, and the specific statutory rights it may infringe.” The Board will conduct its analysis from the “perspective of the economically dependent employee who contemplates engaging in Section 7 activity ....” Because such an employee is inclined to avoid violating work rules, the Board explained, they are also inclined “to interpret it more broadly to restrict or prohibit Section 7 activity than a disinterested observer might.”

Under Stericycle, work policies are presumptively unlawful if they have a “reasonable tendency” to chill employees from exercising their organizing rights or otherwise have a coercive meaning. The employer’s intent in establishing or maintaining the rule is immaterial. A rule may be found presumptively unlawful, “even if a contrary, noncoercive interpretation of the rule is also reasonable.”

If the Board determines an employee could reasonably interpret a rule to restrict or limit Section 7 rights, the burden shifts to the employer to prove the rule or policy “advances legitimate and substantial business interests that cannot be achieved by a more narrowly tailored rule.” If an employer can meet this burden, the rule will be found lawful.

Implications

While the new standard is intended to provide employers the “necessary leeway” to maintain work rules, provided they are narrowly tailored to minimize coercive potential, employers may face greater uncertainty about the lawfulness of work rules and the impact of findings that rules are unlawful as written, even if not applied.

Employers should strongly consider a detailed review of their workplace rules and policies with counsel to ensure they can withstand Board scrutiny.

Related Services

Please contact a Jackson Lewis attorney with questions.

Labor Relations

©2023 Jackson Lewis P.C. This material is provided for informational purposes only. It is not intended to constitute legal advice nor does it create a client-lawyer relationship between Jackson Lewis and any recipient. Recipients should consult with counsel before taking any actions based on the information contained within this material. This material may be considered attorney advertising in some jurisdictions. Prior results do not guarantee a similar outcome.

Focused on employment and labor law since 1958, Jackson Lewis P.C.'s 1,000+ attorneys located in major cities nationwide consistently identify and respond to new ways workplace law intersects business. We help employers develop proactive strategies, strong policies and business-oriented solutions to cultivate high-functioning workforces that are engaged and stable, and share our clients' goals to emphasize belonging and respect for the contributions of every employee. For more information, visit <https://www.jacksonlewis.com>.