Delonie A. Plummer is an Associate in the New York City office of Jackson Lewis where she is a member of the firm's litigation practice group. Delonie represents employers in workplace law matters, including preventative advice and counsel. Delonie also defends large and small corporations, non-profit organizations, and educational institutions in labor and employment matters brought before city and state agencies, and in state and federal courts. Through her practice, Delonie works to promote cultural awareness and equity in the workplace.

Prior to re-joining Jackson Lewis, Delonie worked as in-house labor and employment counsel for a global company where she counseled business executives and human resources leaders on matters affecting a workforce across the US, Canada, EMEA, and APAC. Delonie also served as in-house labor and employment counsel for a global University with campuses in over 10 countries.

While attending law school, Delonie served as a Senior Associate for the Pace International Law Review, and a Federal Judicial Honors Intern in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.
