Raha's passion for employment law began very early on when she began following employment law matters being heard by the Supreme Court during law school. Following her first year of law school, she interned at the Los Angeles office of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, where she developed her foundational understanding of federal employment statutes. In her practice, Raha focuses on litigation of employment claims, including claims of race, sex, age, color, religion, national origin, sexual orientation, and gender identity discrimination/retaliation claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964; age discrimination claims under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act; disability discrimination claims under the Americans with Disabilities Act; and accommodation/discrimination claims under the Family Medical Leave Act. Raha has experience litigating labor issues, including worker' compensation retaliation, wage & hour disputes, and unemployment benefits claims and appeals.

Raha's practice includes preparing and developing company policies and procedures, employee handbooks, and other employment-related documents to ensure they are current and compliant with federal, state, and local laws. Raha also advises employers on best practices to mitigate the risks associated with employee discipline and separation, and to develop recordkeeping practices which can help defend claims that may arise.
