Joseph W. Fazzino is an associate in the Hartford, Connecticut, office of Jackson Lewis P.C. Jay's practice focuses on representing employers in workplace law matters, including preventive advice and counseling.

Jay's litigation practice includes defending employers against claims of discrimination, retaliation, disability accommodation and wage and hour violations. Additionally, he works closely with clients to provide on-going legal support and counsel, partnering with clients to provide training in all areas of employment law.

Prior to joining Jackson Lewis, Jay practiced as a civil defense attorney at a mid-sized law firm in Hartford. He defended the interests of clients in a wide variety of matters at mediation, arbitration and trial.

While in law school, he completed internships for the trial division of the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Connecticut, and the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts.
